Ex-Mayor John Chamberlain died at his home Tuesday after several weeks' illness.

Canadian capitalists have offered for $350,000 seven large block lots of property in Windsor.

Niagara Falls Board of Health has compelled every scholar to produce a certificate of vaccination.

Princess street, the principal street in the city of London, will be paved during the coming year.

Rev. J. C. Dickson, Amherst, has been appointed an agent to represent the Children's Aid Society in this locality.

James Kempt Read, aged five years, at one time a member of the Shannonville, died, last week, at home of his son, Rev. F. E. Arnprior.

Charles Quinn, for some time inmate of the House of Prisoners at Kingston, was seized with apoplexy at the barber shop of J. Heaslip, real street, Saturday afternoon, and died a few minutes after he arrived.

Charles S. Potter, son of Potter, Collins Bay, died on Monday, at Oshawa, where he had been residing for the past ten years. He was foreman in the Malleable Works. Deceased was married and leaves a widow and one daughter, who is thirty-five years of age. He suffered for twelve days from pneumonia. He was a bright young man and highly respected and a member of the Church of England.

On Wednesday, the 12th inst., at 9 a.m., a quiet wedding was solemly performed at St. Paul's church, Flinton, R. W. Irvine, B. A., when H. Kinross, C. P. R. operator, and Lillian E., youngest daughter of William Campbell, were united in marriage. The bride was handsomely gowned in white silk voile, trimmed with white lace, and elegantly embroidered, made over with white silk. The beauty of the cost was enhanced by a large black veil with pink roses and white plumes. A unique feature of the occasion with this marriage is that on the same date, February 1868 (forty-five years ago), the bride and mother of the bride were married in Flinton.

MORVEN.

Hello Mr. Editor, as soon as I get the through line I will send you some news. "All clear"! Very truly yours,
Our young people are so very busy with their dialogues, choruses that they are only half of the home. Great preparations are being made for the concert in the Church, on Friday evening, February 15th. Morven is the place for a good time.

The older folks are indulging in (Homes) quite frequently a more to follow.

Gretna Methodist Church was held on Friday evening of last week. The church was so full that benches had to be placed in the aisles to seat all who came. At about 7.30 p. m. the Rev.
Mr. Nickle, pastor, called the meeting to order. After devotional exercises the good things were passed; the ladies of Gretna have an enviable reputation as to the quality of viands they produce. After ample justice had been done to the eatables the musical and literary entertainment was gone on with. The special musical attractions were Miss Schryver and Mr. Fletcher, of Nananee, all of whose contributions were very much enjoyed.
Miss Parks also recited very nicely. A splendid address was given by the Rev. Mr. Sellery, of Nananee, who is becoming very popular in this district as a tea meeting speaker. The chair was occupied by J. S. Lyons, of

At the meeting of the official board of the Methodist church, Monday evening, 3rd inst., a resolution asking for the continuance of Rev. Dr. Porter as pastor was unanimously adopted. On Tuesday evening, the 11th, which was their forty-ninth wedding anniversary a surprise party consisting of the official board and their wives, and other members of the congregation, visited the parsonage. At the close of a splendid supper, provided by the visiting party, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Porter were presented with a purse and a complimentary address, expressing the high esteem in which they were held, and emphasizing the appreciation of the official board of the faithfulness and marked ability of the Rev. Dr.'s service as pastor and preacher. In his reply tendering thanks on behalf of himself and Mrs. Porter for their visit and gift, Dr. Porter expressed his high and grateful appreciation of the uniform sympathy and kindness of the congregation, and declared that he considered his appointment to the charge as one of the happiest incidents of his ministerial life.

Clergymen Honor James Bryce.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Three hundred and fifty clergymen of New York City, representing more than forty denominations, met at a luncheon yesterday in honor of James Bryce, who has announced his impending retirement as ambassador from Great Brittain. Mr. Bryce, in a speech, congratulated the clergy upon their increasing willingness to forget religious differences when opportunity arose to co-operate for the public good.

Was Walking in His Sleep.

ST. CATHARINES, Feb. 18.—John O'Brien, caught in the back yard of

of the abandoned Pennsylvania Canal with two bullets from a revolver in her heart. Miss Newby left her home Sunday for a tramp across the mountain, she being accustomed to such walks. She was accompanied only by a pet collie and, as usual, carried a revolver. Miss Newby was a prominent figure in Harrisburg society, and was one of the most popular girls in the younger set here.

The police are inclined to the suicide theory, but no motive has been assigned.

ENVER IS DISLIKED.

Turk's Dismal Failure Almost Causes
His Death.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—Turkish soldiers last night attempted to assassinate and succeeded in badly wounding Enver Bey, the Young Turk leader, who last week made a disastrous effort to pierce the flanks of the Bulgarian army on the shores of the Sea of Marmora with a "forlorn hope" of Ottoman troops, who were beaten back with terrible losses. A news agency despatch by wireless telegraphy from Constantinople last night says Enver Bey was stabbed severely several times.

Matters are going from bad to worse with the Turks. Enver Bey's expedition to land a large force on the northern coast of the Sea of Marmora has ended ludicrously. Enver himself narrowly escaping with his life in an open boat. His disheartened men are now crowded, wet and hungry, in the open streets of Gallipoli, in the worst kind of weather, all the houses being filled with wounded.

It is reported that he will ship his men again to take them across the Dardanelles, owing to the report that the Greeks have landed near Bezika Bay, intending to take the forts on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles in the rear.

A correspondent of The Daily News says there are almost certain to be accidents, however, if this move is attempted, for the boats are bad and would be overcrowded, and a great tempest is blowing.

DOES WITHOUT SLEEP.

Harvard Professor Has Stayed Awake
Twenty Years.

BOSTON, Feb. 18.—Dr. George H.
Palmer, professor of philosophy at Harvard University, and Prof. Hugo
R. Munsterberg, head of the department of psychology, are sponsors for the assertion that there is a member of the Harvard faculty noted for the possession of an unusually keen and agile mind, who had not slept in 20 years. They decline to give his name, saying that he is of an unusually sensitive nature, and does not wish his identity disclosed, but describe him to the extent of saying that he is distinguished as a writer and lecturer.
Although physicians feared that he would become insane from insomnia the man is now in good health. When he found that departmental work was making it increasingly difficult to sleep he was greatly worried, but took up the problem in an impersonal way.
He found that when he laid down and relaxed his body in a certain way he was able to rest without sleeping.
Since then he has not slept an instant, and has not found it necessary to do so.

There wasn't the slightest necessity, explained Premier Scadden, for Brit-

Guantanamo is the present objec-

President Taft is plainly worried by the fact that although he has only 17 more days to serve in the White House, the situation in Mexico shows little signs of becoming less troublesome. The President has no desire to leave over for Mr. Wilson the question of this country's relations with Mexico, but he is decidedly opposed to taking any measures himself unless extreme provocation and wholesale murder of Americans drive him to it.

SIERRA POET GONE.

Joaquin Miller Dies In His Little Mountain Cabin.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 18.—Joaquin Miller, known as "the Poet of the Sierras," died at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, at his home in the Piedmont foothills. His daughter, Juanita, and his wife, were with him. He had been in failing health for two years, and unconscious since last Thursday.

Death occurred in his one-room cabin, which he built in the Piedmont Hills many years ago. The end came in the afternoon with warm sunshine flooding the room where lay the author of "Songs of the Sunland." The weakness of age had come upon him in recent years and he rarely ventured from "The Heights," as he called his mountain retreat.

Major Bell Dead at Winnipeg.

WINNIPEG, Feb. 18.—Major W. R. Bell, rifleman, agriculturist and transport officer, died at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, aged 67. Though very active and apparently quite hale and hearty, he was suffering from a fatal illness for over a year. Major Bell was one of the best known characters in the west, having started in the early eighties farming about 50,000 acres at Indian Head, Qu' Appelle, Balgonia, Long Lake, and other central Saskatchewan points. He was born at Brockville, Ont., in 1846.

Railway Collision at Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Feb. 18.—An accident that might have resulted in the loss of many lives, occurred here yesterday, when a light engine, in charge of Engineer Taylor, collided with Chicago Express No. 4, in charge of Conductor Jackson, at the Canadian approach to the Grand Trunk bridge. Two engines were damaged, but no one was injured.

The arsenal appeared to have suffered little from the federal guns. Two shells had penetrated the southern wing of the building, causing some destruction within, but it was said—and reports from the commanders appear to bear out the assertion—that the number of dead and injured within the fortress was small—less than 100 in all.

Forty men of Gen. Blanquet's division, it was asserted at the arsenal, joined Diaz Saturday night. Some of their officers accompanied them, and it was added that deserters from the federal lines entered the rebel positions every day.

It is reported that Francesco de la Barra will be arrested at the first opportunity for alleged complicity in the rebellion.

The federals were preparing last night to use dynamite bombs in an assault on the Diaz positions.

Miss E. M. Hershey Marries a Released Murderer.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 18.—Sidney Ware, a murderer, who served 22 years in the eastern penitentiary, and Miss Elene M. Hershey, who is said to be prominent socially in Harrisburg, were married yesterday.

Ware was convicted of killing Morris Miller. After serving his term on this charge he was sentenced to 25 years for the slaying of Fred. Kindler, but later was pardoned.

Miss Hershey became interested in Ware while he was in prison, when many social workers and society women were endeavoring to obtain his pardon. Their efforts finally resulted in his release. Since gaining his freedom Ware has lived in New Jersey, where he had gained a livelihood painting and sketching.

What He Could Do.

Mildred, who had a small friend to spend the afternoon with her, found that the care of her little brother interfered sadly with their plans. John showed a tiresome persistence in joining their games. Meeting but little encouragement, he asked at last, somewhat wistfully:

OH, gladness is a splendid thing For hard to write about When they are very sorely pressed And subjects have run out! Their souls may not be soaked in joy To match the gentle strain, And they may have a grouch so large That it would block a train.

But still they write of cheerfulness As though it were a part Of their existence and it gushed In torrents from their heart. They put aside their aching tooth, The bill they cannot pay, The rent that's always overdue, And then they work away.

Great gobs of gladness is their theme, The first that comes to hand. They tell the people they should use This one and only brand, But do they use a bit themselves— I mean outside their rime— With which to make a brighter world? I fear they haven't time.

O gladsome gladness, you're the goods For use in daily life, Far better than the grim old grouch Which leads to care and strife! And if the poet does not feel The impulse of his song You'll find that the advice is good Enough to take along.

LAURIER'S WORK STILL GOES ON

INFLUENCE SPREADING IN CONTRAST TO BARRENNESS OF TORY ADMINISTRATION.

While the present session of Parliament has proven singularly barren of any concrete legislation or indication that Mr. Borden's Government has the necessary grasp of affairs to secure faithful work from Parliament, the results of the Laurier Government's work are still going on both at home and abroad. In no particular is this more evident than in the Labor legislation which was built up during 15 years of Liberal administration in Canada until it is to-day regarded as a model for labour legislation the world over.

This is shown by the fact that Great Britain recently sent over Sir George Askwith to study the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, commonly known as the Lemieux Act. After a thorough investigation Sir George has reported that the beneficent manner in which this measure has worked to better the relations between capital and labor not only by ending, but by averting strikes and lockouts met his unqualified approval. In his report Sir George says, "Such a measure as the Lemieux Act, while not insuring a complete absence of strikes and lockouts, would in my opinion give a valuable asset to the United Kingdom and employers and employees alike."

WHY NOT CANADA TOO?

The London Times, January 25th, 1913 has the following despatch from Sydney, N. S. W.—

"Mr. Pearce, Federal Minister for Defence, to-day declares that the naval position is eminently satisfactory. Recruits are being enrolled in good numbers and are taking kindly to the training. The only trouble is to provide sufficient accommodation for the splendid material which is coming forward. 'From the Admiralty,' said Mr. Pearce, 'we have received enthusiastic assistance both in the loan of H. M. cruisers Encounter and Pioneer and in the loan of skilled officers and instructors. In fact the Admiralty has shown it is most willing in every way to help the infant navy's development.'"

This is a striking contrast to the stand taking by the Tory party in the Australian Government. Mr. Borden's proposals place the Canadian ships wholly beyond the control of the Canadian Parliament. Moreover Australia some years ago abandoned the emergency contribution idea, "The Admiralty agreeing that it might be wiser for her to concentrate upon the permanent task which was then allotted to her in the joint programme for the Pacific." As a result Australia has one battle cruiser finished, two more nearly ready and a number of smaller craft being built in British and Australian shipyards, and they will be used to patrol and guard Australian waters, in line with Mr. Churchill's plans.

Mr. Churchill in a recent speech also said that Great Britain still could by special arrangements send out a strong fleet of battleships and cruisers to the Pacific, to unite the Royal Australian Navy and the British China Squadron for the defence of British Columbia, Australia and New Zealand.

No mention of Canada's tribute there. On the contrary instead of our ships "ranging themselves in the battle line with those of the Mother Land and Australia and New Zealand" our Pacific coast will depend for its defence upon the battle line of Imperial and Australian ships, without a Canadian vessel or sailor to share in any possible fight. Premier Borden's eloquence can hardly make Canadians proud of such a position.

SHOULD APPEAL TO COUNTRY

Hon. Mr. Lemieux in his speech on the naval debate on Wednesday again flung a straight challenge to the Tory party—a challenge which has been carefully neglected by the party papers he said: "The present policy of tribute is in direct violation of the principles that have thus far obtained through the history of the British Empire. The duty of the Liberal party is to resist such a set-back to our national development. Herocally this is its task. It was its duty at the time of responsible government, it was its duty at the time of Confederation and it was its duty when Canada was represented at the various Imperial Conferences. Our great Leader might well leave well enough alone. He has done his noble share for the country during the last 40 years. But like the traveller who reached the top of the hill his journey is not at an end—he must still move on and pursue his journey, all the more confident in his path from the success he has already achieved. Defeat would not discourage him because the upholding of British institutions, the advance of self-government must and will, sooner or later, triumph in Canada.

tion; the refusal of the government to proceed with the project for building a Canadian navy; the proposition to send a gift of $35,000,000 to Great Britain, for which they have no mandate, and upon which the country's absolutely divided; the proposition to grant $10,000,000 in aid to agriculture, a continuation of Liberal policy; the proposition to secure better trade relations with the West Indies, also part of the Liberal policy; the dismissals of thousands of government employees all over the country and the election scandals of Macdonald, Richelieu and Antigonish. The main accomplishments are resignations, dismissals and scandals.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his cabinet were sworn in on July 11th, 1896. A brief session of Parliament was held from August 19th to October 5th. Then the cabinet settled down to the promised revision of the tariff. They were ready again and called Parliament on March 25th, 1897. A month later the famous Fielding Tariff with its beneficent readjustment of duties and the inauguration of the Imperial Preference, which aroused the enthusiasm of the Empire, was brought into effect, and on June 3rd, Sir Wilfrid left for England, where at the Queen's Jubilee and the Imperial Conference he won still greater fame for Canada. This was all within the first year of Liberal Administration.

The change of Borden rule does not seem to have benefitted Canada.

Evidently inspired efforts have been made by the Conservative press to make it appear that the seven Nationalists who voted against the Borden Naval resolution on Thursday night were supporting the Liberal party, and absolutely misleading reports seeking to convey this effect were sent out. The exact opposite is the truth. When at the conclusion of the long debate the first division was called on Mr. Verville's sub-amendment calling for an appeal to the people this was accepted by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and supported by the Liberal party. It was as staunchly opposed by the Government side and their Nationalist allies, each of the latter being greeted with derisive laughter from the Liberal benches as they swallowed their principles to vote against it.

Again, when the vote was taken on Sir Wilfrid Laurier's main amendment calling for two Canadian fleet units the Nationalists to a man joined the Government in defeating it.

When the final vote on Mr. Borden's resolution came seven of the Nationalists, Messrs. Achim, Mondou, Guilbault, Lamarche, Boulay, Bellemare and Barrette voted against it. In so doing they did not support the Laurier amendment, but voted as an isolated group, opposed to both propositions. It is altogether likely that the rest of the fourteen Nationalists sitting on the Conservative side would have refused to swallow their election promises, and would also have voted against the Borden resolution but for the influence of the three Nationalist Ministers in his Cabinet, Messrs. Pelletier, Nantel and Coderre, who unlike Mr. Monk, prefer the emoluments of office to carrying out pre-election pledges. The seven Nationalists who voted against the Borden Resolution and the Laurier Amendment were only doing what all the Nationalists were pledged to do at the time Mr. Borden took three of them into his Cabinet with the hope of winning them all over to his side. He lost Mr. Monk after a year, but by placing part of the government of the country in their hands has succeeded in holding some of the others.

Ned Bromley Assurance

He Got Into His Trap, but Got Out of It

By ESTHER VANDE

Ned Bromley was sitting in a car beguiling a long ride by at the signs opposite. Ned, a natured, devil-may-care sort always ready to crack a joke himself out to do any one a favoring his eyes, he saw an elderly man sitting opposite him, Ned thought, rather disliking him. As Ned read his thoughts something like this:

"The young man opposite, the fashionable cut of his passing that age when his most intimate friend. He would swear at the least and probably gambles."

Of course, Ned made this fact remains that disappointment plainly marked on the countenance. Ned, who was Nick, was minded to shock. Leaning forward, he said: "I know a place where the game going on. I wouldn't mind you around if you like."

The man gave him a with turned, showing as much of it possible and made no reply. The rebuff good naturedly thinking how to follow up his process without running the thing turned over to the police gentleman pushed the button stopped, and he got out. Next turned his glance to the gentleman had been sitting fat wallet lying on the seat.

"That comes of no button picket," said Ned, who had a pocketbook from that cause; ing up the wallet, he left it ran after the owner. Unfortunately the man was not to be seen. thing to be done was to extract contents to learn if there was dress within. Ned came upon a bit of information. He found on which was written: "The body of Archibald Crane, per the National bank. In case of illness or death telebank, also my house, No. 74 street."

"How easy it is," mused read character from the any. Any one would know that the kind of man to put such a his pocketbook. But what's From another division of he took some bank bills together. There were five (three twenties, a fifty and a $120. There was another row and twos, making up $7 more. "I reckon I'll give the old a chance to worry a bit," m "I'll telephone tomorrow after he's gone to the bank officers and instructors. In fact the Admiralty has shown it is most willing in every way to help the infant navy's development."

This is a striking contrast to the stand taking by the Tory party in Canada. While the Australians are building an effective navy and training an effective force of their own sons to man it, Mr. Borden merely proposes a donation of borrowed money while his followers declare that it would be impossible to man a fleet unit with Canadians. The Tory trust in the people is evidently as conspicuous by its absence as ever. Under Mr. Borden's vacillating course Canada is falling hopelessly behind the other overseas Dominions.

PREMIER BORDEN'S MISTAKE.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden introduced his naval resolution in Parliament, December 5th, 1912.

"It has been declared in the past, and even during recent years, that responsibility for foreign policy could not be shared by Great Britain with the Dominions. In my humble opinion, adherence to such a position could have but one and that a most disastrous result. During my recent visit to the British Isles, I ventured on many public occasions to propound that the Great Dominions, sharing in the defence of the Empire upon the high seas must necessarily be entitled to share also in the responsibility for and in the control of foreign policy. No declaration that I made was greeted more heartily and enthusiastically than this. It is satisfactory to know that to-day not only His Majesty's Ministers but also the leaders of the opposite political parties in Great Britain have explicitly accepted this principle and have affirmed their conviction that the means by which it can be constitutionally accomplished must be sought, discovered and utilized without delay."

THE TRUTH IS QUITE THE OPPOSITE.

How His Majesty's Ministers in the Imperial Government have explicitly refused this principle is shown by the following official memorandum sent by Rt. Hon. Lewis Harcourt, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to the Canadian Government on January 6th, 1913:—

"Mr. Asquith (Prime Minister) and I had subsequently several private conversations with him (Mr. Borden) at which he expressed the desire that the Canadian and other Dominion Ministers who might be in London as members of the Committee of Imperial Defence, should receive in confidence, knowledge of the policy and proceedings of the Imperial Government in foreign and other affairs. We pointed out to him that the Committee of Imperial Defence is a purely advisory body and is not and cannot under any circumstances become a body to decide on policy, which is and must remain the sole prerogative of the cabinet, subject to the support of the House of Commons."

Either Mr. Borden or Mr. Harcourt has made an absolutely inaccurate statement since they contradict each other on the essential point of a voice in the control of Imperial foreign policy for Canada. It should not be difficult to locate the inaccuracy.

ANOTHER MISTAKE OR DELIBERATE MISSTATEMENT.

Premier Borden in his Naval speech in Parliament on December 5th, 1912, discussing his proposed contribution said: "Canada is sending these ships to range themselves in the battle line of the Empire with those of the Mother Land, Australia and New Zealand."

This is pretty as rhetoric and to appearance, but not in accord with the facts. The Australian Act places the control of the Australian ships under the government of the country in their hands has succeeded in holding some of the others.

In my humble judgment an appeal to this country is necessary because this policy is against the spirit of our institutions. This policy was not in issue during the campaign of 1911. It is a new departure and we cannot commit the country to it without asking the country what it thinks of it. To the Prime Minister I say: You can not and you will not involve the country in foreign politics without consulting it: you must avoid friction in the future if you are a true Britisher; you owe it to Canada and you owe it to the Mother Country. The people must weigh all the consequences of this new venture before having it endorsed by a Parliament which has no mandate from them

THE WORKINGMAN'S INTEREST.

What the contribution of $35,000,000 sent to England instead of the Laurier policy of a Canadian built navy means to the Canadian working man was clearly set forth by Mr. F. F. Pardee during the naval debate, as follows:

Hon. gentlemen opposite say that they propose to send to Great Britain $35,000,000, a large sum. What does it mean? If Sir, my information is correct, seventy per cent. of that $35,000,000—that is, $24,500,000—will go into the pockets of wage-earners. If that goes into the pockets of the workmen, surely it is going to benefit practically every other class of the community, and, above and beyond all—a solace to the hon. gentlemen opposite—surely with that great band of industrial workers built up, their home market will be better than it ever has been before. Then I ask you, Sir, why in Heaven's name we should here as a Parliament take upon ourselves the right to send out of the Dominion the huge sum of $35,000,000 in order that the people of other countries may benefit by it, and not the artisans, the farmers and every other class in the Dominion of Canada. It is absolutely un-Canadian, both from the monetary standpoint and from the fact that the minute this Parliament votes that money, it publishes to the world that Canada, forsooth, will contribute to the fleet of the British Empire; but that she has not to-day the brains, the resources, nor, above and beyond all, the faith in herself to say: We shall spend that money, but we shall spend it within the precincts of our own country.

TWO GOVERNMENTS—A CONTRAST.

On October 10th, 1911, Premier Borden and his Ministry were sworn in. They have already faced one Parliamentary session and are now toward the end of the third month of a second. It would be hard to point to any useful legislation they have accomplished in that time. The outstanding facts of the Conservative regime so far are resignation of Hon. Mr. Monk owing to the shuffling over the naval ques-

What He Wanted.

Mr. Pounds, the retired grocer, was very proud of his new country estate. He spared no expense in doing things well. Judge, then, of his delight when a pair of rooks began building a nest in his park!

But the farmer who owned the next land was not so pleased. In fact, he disliked rooks.

So he gave his sons orders to shoot the offending birds.

Along came Mr. Pounds, enraged.

"See here, my man," he said fiercely, "I wish those lads of yours would let my birds alone. I'm trying to make a rookery, and"

So he pocketed his find and no more about it till the next when he fancied the man was not at home; then after in a telephone directory he Mr. Crane's residence. A feminine voice asked, "What 'Is Mr. Crane at home?" "No; he's gone to the bank. 'Perhaps you had better call bank and ask if he is there."

After some questioning cause of this suggestion concluded to do as advised, a she called the telephone number Ned had given her. He was and said:

"I didn't wish to scare any asked you to call up Mr. Crane sure yourself that he is all right found his body."

"Found his body! My goodness!"

"I'm Edward Bromley."

There was a pause when asked where Mr. Bromley he replied that he was at the city club and asked whom he honor of speaking with and the information that he was with Miss Hester Crane, a bald Crane's daughter.

"Well," continued Ned, "I a pocketbook with about $1 card giving instructions with Mr. Crane's body if for something."

"You don't mean it?"

"I certainly do."

"I know papa is a bit peculiar didn't think he would put like that in his pocketbook."

"I'm in a quandary about of the money."

"How so?"

"Well, I saw Mr. Crane sit site me in a trolley car look rather severely. My neck seem to please him or a snare wore on my little finger. It shock him and asked him if to go where a small game can."

A ripple of laughter came phone at this, then the re couldn't have done anything related to turn papa against "That's just it. Now, sup

"Oh, he wouldn't remember just how much there was in it, and he'll be sure to think he had more than he did have. You see, I wouldn't like to take any risk. To be arrested as a pickpocket would be awful, even as one whose conscience led him to deliver up the goods he had stolen."

"It is complicated. At least it appears to be so. I can readily under- stand your timidity in the matter."

Now, Mr. Bromley's timidity was all balderdash. He was figuring to hear that sweet voice near by and see if the face and figure were as attractive as he pictured it.

"I might give the pocketbook and its contents to you," he said. "without meeting your father; then he wouldn't recognize me for the man who sat op- posite him and asked him to go to a gambling house. Do you see?"

"Yes. That would be a very good way out of it. You might send it to me."

This broke into Mr. Bromley's calcu- lations. It occurred to him that he might as well send his find to Mr. Crane direct. But Ned's wits were sharp enough for the occasion.

"I wouldn't like," he said, "to surren- der the property to any one without being sure of what I was doing. You see, I stand in a delicate position. If I knew I was delivering the goods to the owner's daughter I would feel all right about it. I wouldn't even ask a re- ceipt."

"But you don't know me."

The matter was now getting where Ned wanted it. He availed himself of the opportunity without hesitation.

"I would trust any woman with so sweet a voice with untold wealth."

A pleased "Te-he!" came from the other end of the wire and immediately the reply, "Well, you may bring it if you like."

"When?"

"I suppose you prefer to come when papa is not at home?"

"Certainly. I wouldn't meet him for anything."

"Papa goes to the bank a little be- fore 9 in the morning and comes home about 2:30."

"In that case I would better make the return tomorrow morning, say about 11 o'clock."

"Very well. I will be happy to—I mean I will receive it at that time. But what am I to do about the reward?"

"Oh, the reward is in permitting me, a stranger, to return the pocketbook to you in person. I am very anxious to see if your face is as charming as your voice."

"There you will certainly be disap- pointed. I mean—rather, I don't mean—that my voice is charming—there, you've got me all mixed up."

"Never mind; I shall have the ines- timable happiness of seeing for my- self."

There was more of this before the re- ceivers were hung up, but so much in the same vein that it would become tiresome through repetition. The next morning at 11 o'clock Mr. Bromley rang the bell of 742 Lincoln street, a hand- some stone front residence, and sent up his card. When the young lady came into the room he stood mute with admiration. But his eyes were any- thing but mute. Indeed, his gaze was

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or received so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

the bell of 742 Lincoln street, a hand- some stone front residence, and sent up his card. When the young lady came into the room he stood mute with admiration. But his eyes were any- thing but mute. Indeed, his gaze was such as to make the young lady lower her eyes, but it was nevertheless grati- fying.

It is necessary to pass over a few months in the thread of this story, when, Mr. Bromley and Miss Crane having become avowed lovers, found it necessary to let the lady's father into the secret that she desired to marry a man whom he was likely to recognize as one who had offered to show him a small game. They put their heads to- gether in an attempt, among other things, to discover a device to prevent the old gentleman's recognition of his would be son-in-law. The effort was a failure.

"There's only one way to meet the case," said Ned at last.

"What's that?"

"Cheek."

"What do you mean?"

"I'll declare I never met your father before in my life."

Since there was no other way out of the matter Ned arranged to call when the "body of Mr. Crane" was at home, which Ned had not done before. He shaved out a new pair of whiskers, had his hair curled and put on a pair of eyeglasses. Moreover he wore as differ- ent a suit of clothes from those he had on when he first met Mr. Crane as possible. When introduced to the old gentleman the latter, looking at him scrutinizingly, said:

"Your face is familiar to me, sir."

"I hope you haven't met that fellow who looks so much like me and is al- ways getting me into trouble," Ned broke out. "He's a stool pigeon for a gambling house."

"That's the man," replied the other. "He had the impudence to ask me to go with him to his villainous place."

"What shall I do about it? If the thing goes on much longer I won't have a shred of character left."

Miss Crane went to the window, making a great effort to repress her laughter, while her lover discussed with her father the question as to whether the law could be made avail- able to protect the former against a man of bad character who resembled him.

Notwithstanding the success of this luring stratagem Ned afterward occa- sionally caught the old gentleman look- ing at him with an expression indicat- ing that he wasn't quite certain but that he was the man he had met in a street car. However, Ned married Miss Crane, and there was one thing his father-in-law never suspected—that Ned was the person who had returned al- so lost pocketbook.

Mozart's Quick Work.

On one occasion Mozart was making merry with his friends at midnight when not a single note was written of the overture to "Don Giovanni," which was to be produced on the fol- lowing morning. Awaking refreshed, he set to work on the overture, dash- ing off sheet after sheet with incred- ible rapidity and dispatching them to the copyists. The opera was to be- gin at 7 in the evening, and a few minutes after that hour Mozart was in his place as conductor, baton in hand, while the parts with the ink still wet on some of them were being played by the orchestra.

Mrs. Greeley's Mistake.

Congressman Amos Cummings told the following story about an experi- ence he once had with Horace Greeley:

"One day I was out to see Greeley, at Chappaqua, about some newspaper business. The old gentleman saw me coming as he stood looking out of the window and opened the door himself.

"Come in here, Amos," he said as he led me into the parlor.

"I followed him into the room, and, as I was going to remain only a minute, I laid my hat, gloves and cane upon a center table. Greeley and I had just immersed ourselves in a talk when Mrs. Greeley swept into the room. The moment she entered her eyes fell in- dignantly upon my hat, gloves and cane on the table. Without a word she swooped upon the outfit like a fish- hawk and threw them out the win- dow. Then she left the room without pausing for speech, as one who had taught somebody that the hall was the place for such things. I was inclined to get a trifle warm, but Greeley stretched out his hand in a deprecatory way and cheered me with the remark, 'Never mind, Amos; she thought they were mine.'—Lippincott's Magazine.

CURLERS AT TORONTO

MAKE A SPLENDID SHOWING.

The people of Napanee have reason to be justly proud of the records which their representatives have usually made when taking part in any sports, whether at home or competing in other places, but they should take special pride in the work done by the two rinks which represented the Napanee Curling Club in the battle for the curling premiership of the Province in Toronto last week. In the big event—playing for the Ontario Tankard—they worked their way into the semi-finals and were then only beaten by six shots in the contest with Owen Sound. In this event they had to compete with the best curlers in the Province and against men who have been going to Toronto for years and who have made great records in the past. Their first game with Sarnia and after a very exciting contest they won by the following score :

| Napanee        | Sarnia           |
|----------------|------------------|
| Leonard, skip, | 20 Watson, skip, |
| Maybee, skip,  | 11 Hayes, skip,  |
| —              | —                |
| 31             | 24               |

The next battle was with Stratford, the City that has always sent players to be reckoned with. This score was as follows :

| Napanee        | Stratford          |
|----------------|--------------------|
| Leonard, skip, | 9 Steele, skip,    |
| Maybee, skip,  | 25 Ferguson, skip, |
| —              | —                  |
| 34             | 32                 |

These two matches were played on Tuesday, Feb. 11th. On Wednesday morning in the semi-finals their opponents were from Owen Sound. The score was as follows :

| Owen Sound     | Napanee           |
|----------------|-------------------|
| Wright, skip,  | 18 Maybee, skip,  |
| Telford, skip, | 17 Leonard, skip, |
| —              | —                 |
| 35             | 29                |

This match, lost by six shots, eliminated our players from the contest for the Tankard. It was a hard match to lose and some of the spectators who saw all of the play have stated that the Napanee men played a wonderful game, after Owen Sound had secured a big lead at the opening of the game.

The home team then entered the contest for the Governor-General's Prize. Their first game was with Orilla and they were successful in winning by a majority of two shots.

| Napanee        | Orilla            |
|----------------|-------------------|
| Leonard, skip, | 10 Stewart, skip, |
| Maybee, skip,  | 22 Toogood, skip, |
| —              | —                 |
| 32             | 30                |

After this match there were but three contestants left in the field—Queen City, Brampton and Napanee. In the draw for the play on Thursday Napanee drew a bye. Brampton then played Queen City on Thursday morning and won by two shots. In the finals the Brampton players were a bit too strong for Napanee. The score follows :

| Brampton        | Napanee           |
|-----------------|-------------------|
| Thanburn, skip, | 20 Leonard, skip, |
| Beck, skip,     | 19 Maybee skip,   |
| —               | —                 |
| 39              | 27                |

In this series of five games our representatives won three and lost two. The aggregate scores were Napanee, 153, opponents, 160—this record made in competition with the best curlers from all parts of the province.

The two rinks were made up of the following players :

|                    |            |
|--------------------|------------|
| G. P. Reiffenstein | H. Daly    |
| J. W. Robinson     | W. A. Daly |

CURLING SONG.

The following song, which is posed by the late Dr. Norman of Glasgow, will be of interest to curlers, especially to those who are of the Scottish birth. Dr. McLe even attempted to curl but he enjoyed the exciting scene of a curling match, and the keenness displayed by the players as they strove for the honors of the "roaring rink."

A CALL TO CORRECT MISUNDER- STANDING.

Bath, Feb. 19th, 1913.

To the Editor of the Express:
 Sir—It has been stated by your correspondent, Mr. M. Rowse, that the subject of the education given in High and Continuation Schools is of very great interest to everyone. I think it should be. Let us try to find out whether this is of as great interest as the saving of a dollar. The fact that D comes before E in the alphabet may account for some thinking more of a dollar than an education.
 "Economy," what is it?
 1st—Any practical system in which means are adjusted to ends.

2nd—A disposition to save or spare.
 3rd—Cheapness of production or operation.

Now, upon the roads, to market our produce, we expend large sums of money and think it right. Let me ask, should we, upon the roads to education attempt to show our disposition to save or spare?

There is now before the County Council a petition concerning the Bath Continuation School asking assistance in the maintenance of said school, which the Ontario statutes say the County Council may grant. Of necessity it follows that so soon as the County Council grants said petition the taxes of ratepayers within said district must increase to small extent.

Should those very greatly interested in education in High and Continuation Schools stand back and hold others, on account of this? Is this economy? One should be reasonable in their petition. As per statement the position from a dollars and cents or mill point of view is shown. Total assessment of suggested district, $746,571. Estimated amount of money necessary to levy for maintenance of school, $822. A very small fraction over a mill on the dollar is what it means. I think every person who signed the petition now before the County Council fully understood this.
 Your correspondent seems to think Bath should pay more than outside districts on account of pupils leaving the amount of board in the village.
 I presume he did not think (not having a correct understanding) that Bath, while willing to be assessed equally, offers free the use of half their school building, $5500, equipment, $300, library, $200, making a total of $6000.
 The school will be free to all within the district, which district the county council may enlarge upon if they think wise. If the amount of money estimated (not asked) was one quarter more than required all the better for any person taxed for said school. I believe I was largely responsible for Mr. Rowse signing the petition and am almost inclined to feel sorry for it, but let us hope that his very great interest in education in High and Continuation Schools will change his economical ideas. I confess to having told him that I thought he would be relieved of the tax in Ernestown when he was attached to a district about Bath—I was advised that this would be the case. To one very much interested this should be of little importance. I really thought Mr. Rowse in his talk with me was so interested as to only wish to get signatures upon said petition. He says there should be Continuation Schools at Napanee, Newburgh, Odessa and Bath. I fail to see the necessity as already there are High Schools at Napanee and Newburgh and Continuation School at Odessa with two teachers while we at Bath have Continuation with one teacher. What we ask, understand, is to get assistance to increase the efficiency, not to establish a new school. Your correspondent also says there are two courses open, there is

SPIRITUALISM IS DEMONISM

Mediums Are Deceived as Well as Their Followers.

Spirit Communications Through Mediums Come Not From Dead Humans, But From the Fallen Angels, Says Pastor Russell—In the Bible
 He Traces Their History.

PASTOR RUSSELL

a judgment of the Great Day."

(Jude 6.) He said:
 Last Sunday we discussed the fall of the angels, who succumbed to sin,
 first introduced by Satan's rebellion, and continued by man's fall from Divine favor. Man's fall had to do with the fall of the angels, and they in turn have had much to do with man's further perversion mentally, morally and physically. St. Paul declared that we wrestle not with the flesh and blood merely, but with the wicked spirits in high positions.— Ephesians 6:12.

Pastor Russell said that many who read his sermons in the newspapers will laugh at what may seem to be his superstitious belief that fallen angels are in close propinquity with humanity—a continual power for evil, God and Truth opposing. Personally he knows nothing of Spiritism; for obedient to the Divine command, he avoids everything occult. His knowledge of Spiritism comes mainly from the Bible but is well supported by the testimony of many rescued from the thralldom of Spiritism.

The Bible styles the fallen angels demons, translated devils in our Common Version. These demons, not our forefathers, have perverted the True Gospel. St. Paul refers to their insidious teachings as "doctrines of demons." These demons have blas-phemed God by teaching that He had prepared for the everlasting torture of nearly all of humanity—except the Elect—at the hands of fire-proof demons.

Thus the human mind was turned against God in dread. Thus humanity learned to think of Satan and his associates as in some far-off place—not near them. But now, the Pastor said, that humanity are gradually learning that the theory of a great torture place is a hoax, these demons would lead truth-seekers to the opposite extreme, and convince them that there is no such place, nor are there any demons.

The Bible, however, teaches that these spirits are near us—in our atmosphere, and that they have power over us only as we yield our wills to their suggestions, and our minds to sin. St. Peter says that Satan goes about through the earth, seeking whom he may devour; and that his host of fallen angels are a present power for evil throughout the world.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—Russia importing wheat and showing a hostile front in regard to Austrian desires had a bullish effect today on prices here. Despite an early break and another at midday, the wheat market closed steady at 1-2c to 5-8c net advance. Corn wound up 1-4c to 1-2c above Saturday night, oats unchanged to 1-8c higher, and provisions varying from 2 1-2c off to a rise of 2 1-2c to 5c.

The Liverpool market closed 3/4d to 1/4d higher on wheat, and 1/4d higher on corn.
 Paris wheat closed 1/4c to 1/2c lower. Berlin, 1/4c to 1/2c higher. Buda Pest, 1/4c lower, and Antwerp, unchanged.

MONTREAL MARKET.

MONTREAL, Feb. 17.—Cables on Manitoba wheat came stronger at an advance of 1/4d to 3d. There was a good demand from foreign buyers for nearby and spring shipment, which resulted in a fair amount of business being worked. The demand for oats was also fair and sales were made for nearby shipment, but the prices for spring were 1c out of line. The local trade in coarse grains was quiet.
 Flour steady. Demand for bran fair, but other lines of millfeed quiet. Butter and

WINNIPEG, Feb. 17.—Wheat prices were strong early, but later weakened on heavy receipts at Minneapolis and favorable weather reports from the U. S. winter wheat belt. Values again stiffened nearing the close on good export demand and covering by shorts. The close was 1/2c higher.

Cash demand was good, but offerings were light. Oats and flax were in fair demand. Oats were unchanged, while flax was stronger, options closing 1 1/2c to Odessa with two teachers while we at Bath have Continuation with one teacher. What we ask, understand, is to get assistance to increase the efficiency, not to establish a new school. Your correspondent also says there are two courses open, there is but one, for at present, according to the Ontario Statutes the County Council may, where a Continuation school is established in a village or town, attach to village or town for the purposes of this section any portion of townships contiguous thereto. What other course can we pursue through the County Council? I know of none. Your correspondent states that he signed the petition rather than have no Continuation School at Bath. It was never represented that Bath would suffer such a loss should he not sign petition. He was only asked to sign, as one very interested in education, to help improve the efficiency of school. Let us take advantage of the only channel through which at present we can improve the condition.

Hoping a more correct understand- ing may soon be arranged at.

HAROLD S. NORTHMORE.

STANDARDIZATION OF PARTS.

Eli Whitney's Scheme Revolutionized the Manufacturing Business.

The system of the standardization of parts, now so universal, originated with Eli Whitney, the inventor of the cotton gin, when he undertook to make muskets. The government gave him a contract in 1793 for 10,000 stands of arms, although he had no "plant" for their manufacture. He built a small factory in New Haven, Conn., and began work, but found a great obstacle in the difficulty of getting good workmen, especially those capable of acting as foremen under his novel methods.

His plan, as is pointed out by George Hiles in a recent original study of Whitney's achievements, was to make of his factory a single huge machine. In an army before Whitney's day each man, highly skilled, produced by himself a distinct part of a musket. This division of labor Whitney supplanted by so apportioning work that little or no skill was demanded. He separated the various tasks and at each of these operations kept a group busy. For their assistance he simplified each operation and introduced three aids since indispensable in manufacture—drilling by templets or patterns, filing by jigs or guides and milling irregular forms.

From first to last a model musket was copied with precision so that every lock, for example, was exactly like every other among thousands. When all the parts needed to form a weapon were assembled they united much superior to a musket formed on any other plan. In case of repair a new part exactly fitted the place of an old part and at a trifling cost.

In order to accomplish his purpose, and carry out his contract, whose execution was much prolonged, Whitney was obliged to invent new tools and machines at every step, none of which was patented. By doing so he not only greatly improved the finish and accuracy of his guns and the speed of their manufacture, but so impressed the value of the idea of standardization upon the minds of manufacturers that it was presently applied in other trades and has long since become the rule in manufacturing.—Harper's.

over us only as we yield our wills to their suggestions, and our minds to sin. St. Peter says that Satan goes about through the earth, seeking whom he may devour; and that his host of fallen angels are a present power for evil throughout the world. Similarly Jesus bids us pray, "Deliver us from the Evil One."

Cast Down to Tartarus.

Pastor Russell said that St. Peter tells that the fallen angels were cast down to Tartarus at the time of the Deluge. The word Tartarus is used only once in the Bible, and mistranslated hell. It is generally conceded to refer to the atmosphere.

We must not confound the Bible story of the fall of the angels with the symbolic picture of the Revelation, where Satan is cast out of Heaven, said the speaker. This does not refer to the literal Heaven. It is a figurative description of events which occurred long ago, when the Roman Empire was overthrown and its apacy set itself up, claiming to be Messiah's Kingdom.

Satan's First Lie Perpetuated.

The Pastor then showed at some length that although God could have destroyed Satan at any time, yet He has permitted him to continue in his course for six thousand years, in order to demonstrate the evil character of sin, in contrast with the beauty of holiness. When men and angels shall have learned their lesson well, Satan and all who love sin will die the Second Death.

Note Satan's persistency and effort, said the Pastor. God distinctly told Adam that disobedience would bring death. Satan contradicted the Almighty pointblank, declaring, "Ye shall not surely die." When mankind experienced death, Satan continued to pervert God's Word and men's minds by saying that when men die, they do not die really; but that a dead man is more alive than is a living one.

This absurdity has been repeated to our race century after century, until all believe Satan's lie, and discredit God's Word. The way back to God and to sanity of reasoning is to repudiate the lie, and believe God's Truth: "The dead know not anything."

If the Truth prevailed, where would come in prayers and masses for the dead? If the dead know not anything, how can they suffer in hell or purgatory? Where would come in the belief of those who claim to have communication with the dead?

Princess Was Canadian.

Princess Agnes Salm-Salm, who died at Karlsruhe, Germany, recently, was an aunt of Felix S. S. Johnson, of Kingston, whose sister was with the princess when she died. Her highness was to have visited the consul, but illness prevented her crossing the ocean. She was not American by birth, but Canadian, having been born at Phillipsburg, Quebec.

CATTLE MARKETS

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Feb. 17.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ended Feb. 15, were 1300 cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 2850 hogs and 400 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1000 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 1800 hogs and 225 calves.

A stronger feeling prevailed in the market for cattle this morning and prices advanced 25c per cwt. The strength was attributed to the smaller supply than in the week ago, the higher prices ruling in the western market at the latter end of last week and the fact that cattle are costing more money in the country, owing to the keen competition for supplies between American and Canadian buyers. Demand was good and a fairly active trade was done. Full loads of choice steers sold at $7 and some sellers were asking as high as $7.25, while choice loads of mixed steers and heifers sold at $6.75 to $6.85 and good at $6.15 to $6.50 per cwt. A good trade was also done in choice cows at $5.50 to $6 and bulls at $5.50 to $5.75 per cwt.

Owing to the very limited supply of lambs coming forward a stronger feeling developed in the market and prices advanced 25c per cwt. Demand was fair and sales were made at $7.50 to $7.75 per cwt. Sheep were quiet with a firm undertone. The offerings of calves were small, for which demand was good, at prices ranging from $5 to $12 each. The hog market was strong and prices have advanced 25c to 50c per cwt., due to the small supplies. Demand was good, selected lots selling at $9.90 to $10.10 per cwt., weighed off the cars:

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7 to $7.25; medium, $5.25 to $6.25; common, $4 to $4.50; canners, $3 to $3.25; choice cows, $5.75 to $6; medium, $5 to $5.50; bulls, $4 to $5.75; milkers choice, each, $75 to $80; common and medium, each, $65 to $70; springers, $55 to $60.

Sheep—Ewes, $5 to $5.25; bucks and culls, $4.50 to $4.75; lambs, $7.50 to $7.75. Hogs—F.o.b., $9.90 to $10.10.

Calves—$5 to $12.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—Cattle—Receipts, 23,000; market steady to a shade higher; beefs, $6.50 to $9.15; Texas steers, $5.10 to $5.90; stockers and feeders, $4.75 to $7.60; cows and heifers, $3.70 to $7.50; calves, $6.75 to $10.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 47,000; market active, higher; light, $8.10 to $8.40; mixed, $8.05 to $8.37½; heavy, $7.85 to $8.35; rough, $7.90 to $8.05; pigs, $6.50 to $8.20; bulk of sales, $8.20 to $8.35.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 30,000; market steady; native, $5 to $6.50; yearlings, $6.75 to $7.35; lambs, native, $7 to $8.75.

LIVERPOOL LIVE STOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 17.—John Rogers & Co. cable that with only moderate supplies traded for cattle at Birkenhead today was very firm, good and being in special demand and late quotations were easily maintained, viz., 13-1-3c to 15c per pound for Irish steers.

Sarcastic.

This incident is related of a Scotch doctor, new to the gun, who adventured upon a day's rabbit shooting.

Chased by the ferrets, bunny was a rather quick moving target, and the medico was not meeting with the success he anticipated.

"Hang it all, man," he exclaimed impatiently to the keeper who accompanied him; "these beasts are too quick for me!"

"Aye, doctor," the pawky keeper replied, "but ye surely didna expect them tae lie still like yer patients till ye kill them?"

NOTES ON BEES.

The winter so far has been a remarkably easy one on bees wintered out of doors says Morley Pettit, the Provincial Apiarist. What is causing uneasiness at present is the naked condition of the clover. It remains to be seen how it will come through the freezing and thawing of spring.

Mice are reported to be bad in some parts and the little rascals can do a lot of harm in boxes where bees or combs are packed. They are very fond of honey and dead bees and will destroy combs to get access to either.

They also find the packing material nice for making nests right close to the cluster of bees. Of course this kind of thing would not be tolerated by the bees in summer, but now they are asleep and will not defend themselves but suffer heavy loss from being so disturbed. Wintering boxes should by rights, be mouse-proof, but it is not always easy to have them so. The alternative is a free use of mouse traps and poison.

Out-of-door wintered bees must by all means be sheltered from cold winds. This is especially necessary on the approach of spring when brood rearing will be starting and all the heat possible must be retained in the hives to aid incubation. Remember that the brood chamber of a hive is an incubator whose temperature is kept up by natural heat generated by the nurse bees who "sit" on the eggs and young larvae. If the hive is cold the brooders have to sit closer together and cannot cover so many eggs or larvae.

If the hive is warm they can spread out and cover more brood. This means more young bees will be hatched in the same time. Then when summer comes there will be more workers in the hive to gather honey. Anyone who thinks about this for a moment will see why all hives should be kept warmly packed and sheltered from cold winds during what beekeepers call the spring breeding up time, right up to settled warmer weather.

On the other hand entrances must not be closed. There is that about bee nature which does not brook confinement and except when bees are screened in for moving they must have "free ingress and egress" to their hives. On bright, cold days it is well to shade the entrance however lest the sunshine tempt some bees to come out and be lost on the snow.

The winter is the time for purchasing and preparing next summer's supplies. New hives can be nailed and painted and old ones repaired. Loose joints in supers should be given extra nails, and, above all, every part of the hive which is exposed to weather should be well coated with a light colored durable paint. For covers, the most durable and satisfactory water-proofing is galvanized iron. Then for protection from hot sun in summer and cold spring and fall a cover should be packed.

RED TAPE IN FRANCE.

It Entangles One Even in Getting the Gas Turned on in a Flat.

France is at once the paradise and the inferno of bureaucracy. For example, I wanted the gas to be turned on in my flat. A simple affair! Drop a postcard to the company telling the company to come and turn it on. Not at all! I was told that it would be better to call upon the company. So I called.

"What do you desire, monsieur?"

"I am the new tenant of a flat, and I want the gas turned on."

"Ah! You are the new tenant of a flat, and you want the gas turned on. M. Chose, here is a new tenant of a flat, and he wants the gas turned on. Where should he be led to?"

About a quarter of an hour of this, and then at last I am led by a municipal employee sure of his job and his pension to the far distant room of the higher employee appointed by the city of Paris to deal with such as me. This room is furnished somewhat like that of a solicitor's managing clerk.

"Good morning, sir."

"Good morning, sir."

"It appears, sir—M. Bennay, fourth floor, No. 4 Rue de Calais, sixth arrondissement, is it not?—that you want the gas turned on. Will you put yourself to the trouble of sitting down, M. Bennay?"

I sit down. He sits down.

"Ah! So you want the gas turned on! Let us see, let us see." . . .

Hundreds of such applications must be made every day. But the attitude of this ceremonious official might be put into words thus: "A strange and interesting application of yours, to have the gas turned on! Very remarkable! It attracts me. The case must be examined with the care and the respect which it deserves."—Arnold Bennett in Metropolitan.

JOYS OF A RUSSIAN HOTEL.

Nice Lofty Rooms With Sealed Windows and Smoke Laden Air.

Writing of the great Russian city of Odessa in Harper's, Sydney Adamson tells of the somewhat primitive arrangements of even the modern hotels. "For our ignorance of Russian we had the privilege of paying over twice the legal fare for our drive to the hotel. The porters obligingly arranged the matter and quite cheerfully kept the difference. How like the rest of the world! We felt at home at once. The large, lofty bedchambers and corridors of the hotels make it just possible to live in rooms that have double windows sealed with putty, which are never opened from the beginning of the winter till the spring thaw is in the air.

"As there are no open fires the only ventilation is from the slightly better air of the corridors. A framed notice on the wall informs the visitor of all the privileges he is graciously permitted to pay extra for, among them the joy of being clean at the rate of 10 kopecks for a jug of hot water or 50 kopecks for a bath. But the greatest mystery of all was a samovar at 25 kopecks a time it was discovered that Russian, having a taste for or other warm refreshment, lighted samovar and prepared beverage if he is not fortunate to possess a wife to do it for him. "With the lady managing the fuming samovar and her lot of innumerable cigarettes, with visitor to help, one can easily—without forgetting the hermetic windows—the atmosphere some worthy Russians go to

COPYRIGHT, 1906, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY.

This was a decided disappointment

I allude to the disposition which Grey showed on the morning of the third day to do a little summing-up in writing. You remember that she had been earnestly desired to do so by the Inspector, and that she had not only refused to do so, but had asked for by the Inspector, and that she had been earnestly desired to do so by the Inspector. Now I seemed likely to have a chance of not open my eyes too wide to the meaning of her seemingly capricious requests. A little pencil dangled from the end of my watch chain. When she saw it, let her hold it in her hand for a minute? It was so like a watch chain used to have. Of course I liked to have it of course I let her retain it in her hand while in her hand. But the pencil was not enough. A few minutes later she

1 Grey appeared in the bay approaching the so-called manufactory of Wellgood. The looked for light on the waterside was not there. All was dark except where the windows reflected the light of the moon.

This was a decided disappointment to Sweetwater, if not to Mr. Grey. He had expected to detect signs of life in this quarter, and this additional proof of Wellgood's absence from home made it look as if they had come out on a fool's errand and might much better have stuck to the road.

"No promise there," came in a mutter from his lips. "Shall I row in, sir, and try to make a landing?"

"You may row nearer. I should like a closer view. I don't think we shall attract any attention. There are more boats than ours on the water."

Sweetwater was startled. Looking round, he saw a launch, or some such small steamer, riding at anchor not far from the mouth of the bay. But that was not all. Between it and them was a rowboat like their own, resting quietly in the wake of the moon.

"I don't like so much company," he muttered. "Something's brewing; something in which we may not want to take part."

"Very likely," answered Mr. Grey grimly. "But we must not be deterred—not till I have seen"—the rest Sweetwater did not hear. Mr. Grey seemed to remember himself. "Row nearer," he now bade. "Get under the shadow of the rocks if you can. If the boat is for him, he will show himself. Yet I hardly see how he can board from that bank."

It did not look feasible. Nevertheless, they waited and watched with much patience for several long minutes. The boat behind them did not advance, nor was any movement discernible in the direction of the manufactory. Another short period, then suddenly a light flashed from a window high up in the central gable, sparkled for an instant and was gone. Sweetwater took it for a signal and, with a slight motion of the wrist, began to work his way in toward shore till they lay almost at the edge of the piles.

"Hark!"

It was Sweetwater who spoke. Both listened. Mr. Grey with his head turned toward the launch and Sweetwater with his eye on the cavernous space, sharply outlined by the piles, which the falling tide now disclosed under each contiguous building. Goods had been directly shipped from these stores in the old days. This he had learned in the village. How shipped he had not been able to understand from his previous survey of the building. But he thought he could see now. At low tide, or better, at half tide, access could be got to the floor of the extension and, if this floor held a trap, the mystery would be explainable. So would be the hovering boat—the signal light and—yes! this sound overhead of steps on a rattling planking.

"I hear nothing," whispered Mr. Grey from the other end. "The boat is still there, but not a man has dipped an oar."

"They will soon," returned Sweetwater as a smothered sound of clanking iron reached his ears from the hollow spaces before him. "Duck your head, sir; I'm going to row in under this portion of the house."

Mr. Grey would have protested, and with very good reason. There was scarcely a space of three feet between them and the boards overhead. But Sweetwater had so immediately suited action to word that he had no choice.

light they burned—a match?"

Sweetwater did not answer. He dared not. How speak of the electric torch he as a detective carried in his pocket? That would be to give himself away. He therefore let this question slip by and put in one of his own.

"Are you ready to go back now, sir? Are we all done here?" This with his ear turned and his eye bent forward, for the adventure they had interrupted was not at an end, whether their part in it was or not.

Mr. Grey hesitated, his glances following those of Sweetwater.

"Let us wait," said he in a tone which surprised Sweetwater. "If he is meditating an escape, I must speak to him before he reaches the launch. At all hazards," he added after another moment's thought.

"All right, sir. How do you propose?"

His words were interrupted by a shrill whistle from the direction of the bank. Promptly and as if awaiting this signal the two men in the rowboat before them dipped their oars and pulled for the shore, taking the direction of the manufactory.

Sweetwater said nothing, but held himself in readiness.

Mr. Grey was equally silent, but the lines of his face seemed to deepen in the moonlight as the boat, gliding rapidly through the water, passed them within a dozen boat lengths and slipped into the opening under the manufactory building.

"Now row!" he cried. "Make for the launch. We'll intercept them on their return."

Sweetwater, glowing with anticipation, bent to his work. The boat beneath them gave a bound, and in a few minutes they were far out on the waters of the bay.

"They're coming!" he whispered eagerly as he saw Mr. Grey looking anxiously back. "How much farther shall I go?"

"Just within hailing distance of the launch," was Mr. Grey's reply.

Sweetwater, gauging the distance with a glance, stopped at the proper point and rested on his oars. But his thoughts did not rest. He realized that he was about to witness an interview whose importance he easily recognized. How much of it would he hear? What would be the upshot and what was his full duty in the case? He knew that this man Wellgood was wanted by the New York police, but he was possessed with no authority to arrest him even if he had the power.

"Something more than I bargained for," he inwardly commented. "But I wanted excitement, and now I have got it. If only I can keep my head level, I may get something out of this, if not all I could wish."

Meantime the second boat was very nearly on them. He could mark the three figures and pick out Wellgood's head from among the rest. It had a resolute air. The face, on which, to his evident discomfiture, the moon shone, wore a look which convinced the detective that this was no patent medicine manufacturer, nor even a caterer's assistant, but a man of nerve and resources, the same, indeed, whom he had encountered in Mr. Fairbrother's house with such disastrous, almost fatal, results to himself.

The discovery, though an unexpected one, did not lessen his sense of the extreme helplessness of his own position. He could witness, but he could not act; follow Mr. Grey's orders, but indulge in none of his own. The de-small and twinkling light defined the boathouse. He hoped Mr. Grey would speak; hoped that in some way, by some means, he might obtain a clew to his patron's thoughts. But the English gentleman sat like an image and did not move till a slight but sudden breeze, blowing in shore, seized the paper in his hand and carried it away, past Sweetwater, who vainly sought to catch it as it went fluttering by into the water ahead, where it shone for a moment, then softly disappeared.

Sweetwater uttered a cry; so did Mr. Grey.

"Is it anything you wanted?" called out the former, leaning over the bow of the boat and making a dive at the paper with his oar.

"Yes; but if it's gone, it's gone," returned the other with some feeling. "Careless of me, very careless, but I was thinking of"—

He stopped. He was greatly agitated, but he did not encourage Sweetwater in any further attempts to recover the lost memorandum. Indeed, such an effort would have been fruitless. The paper was gone, and there was nothing left for them but to continue their way. As they did so it would have been hard to tell in which breast chagrin mounted higher. Sweetwater had lost a clew in a thousand, and Mr. Grey—well, no one knew what he had lost. He said nothing and plainly showed by his changed manner that he was in haste to land now and be done with this doubtful adventure.

When they reached the boathouse Mr. Grey left Sweetwater to pay for the boat and started at once for the hotel.

The man in charge had the bow of the boat in hand, preparatory to pulling it up on the boards. As Sweetwater turned toward him he caught sight of the side of the boat, shining brightly in the moonlight. He gave a start and, with a muttered ejaculation, darted forward and picked off a small piece of paper from the dripping keel. It separated in his hand and part of it escaped him, but the rest he managed to keep by secreting it in his palm, where it still clung, wet and possibly illegible, when he came upon Mr. Grey again in the hotel office.

"Here's your pay," said that gentleman, giving him a bill. "I am very glad I met you. You have served me remarkably well."

There was an anxiety in his face and if ever I should be so happy or so miserable as to meet his eye again. Humiliated to the dust, I could see no worth now in any of the arguments I had advanced. I flew from one extreme to the other, and was imputing perfect probity to Mr. Grey and an honorable if mysterious reason for all his acts, when the door opened and he came in. Instantly my last doubt vanished. I had not expected him to return so soon.

He was glad to be back; that I could see, but there was no other gladness in him. I had looked for some change in his manner and appearance —that is, if he returned at all—but the one I saw was not a cheerful one, even after he had approached his daughter's bedside and found her greatly improved. She noticed this and scrutinized him strangely. He dropped his eyes and turned to leave the room,
but was stopped by her loving cry;
he came back and leaned over her.

"What is it, father? You are fatigated, worried?"

"No, no; quite well," he hastily assured her. "But you—are you as well as you seem?"

"Indeed yes. I am gaining every day. See, see! I shall soon be able to sit up. Yesterday I read a few words."

He started, with a side glance at me which took in a table near by on which a little book was lying.

"Oh, a book?"

"Yes, and—Arthur's letters."

The father flushed, lifted himself, patted her arm tenderly and hastened into another room.

Miss Grey's eyes followed him longingly, and I heard her give utterance to a soft sigh. A few hours before this would have conveyed to my suspicious mind deep and mysterious meanings, but I was seeing everything now in a different light, and I found myself no longer inclined either to exaggerate or to misinterpret these little marks of filial solicitude. Trying to rejoice over the present condition of my mind, I was searching in the hidden depths of my nature for the patience of which I stood in such need when every thought and feeling were again thrown into confusion by the receipt of another communication from the inspector in which he stated that something had occurred to bring the authorities round to my way of thinking and that the test with the stiletto was to be made at once.

Could the irony of fate go further?
I dropped the letter half read, querying
if it were my duty to let the inspector know of the flaw I had discovered in my own theory before, I proceeded with the attempt I had suggested when I believed in its complete soundness. I had not settled the question when I took the letter up again. Rereading its opening sentence, I was caught by the word "something." It was a very indefinite one, yet was capable of covering a large field. It must cover a large field or it could not have produced such a change in the minds of these men, conservative from principle and in this instance from discretion. I would be satisfied with that word "something" and quit further thinking. I was weary of it. The inspector was now taking the initiative, and I was satisfied to be his simple instrument and no more.

Arrived at this conclusion, however, I read the rest of the letter. The test was to go on, but under different conditions. It was no longer to be dishes, which I saw awaiting me on a side table, when Mr. Grey came in and was ushered to his seat.

The soup was not there, but I advanced with my tray and stood waiting—not too near, lest the violent beating of my heart should betray me. As I did so the waiter disappeared and the door behind us opened. Though Mr.
Grey's eye had fallen on the package, and I saw him start, I darted one glance at the room thus disclosed and saw that it held two tables. At one the inspector and some one I did not know sat eating. At the other a man alone, whose back was to us all and who seemingly was entirely disconnected with the interests of this tragic moment. All this I saw in an instant—the next my eyes were fixed on Mr. Grey's face.

He had reached out his hand to the package, and his features showed an emotion I hardly understood.

"What's this?" he murmured, feeling it with wonder, I should almost say anger. Suddenly he pulled off the wrapper, and my heart stood still in expectancy. If he quailed—and how could he help doing so if guilty?—what a doubt would be removed from my own breast, what an impediment from police action! But he did not quail.
He simply uttered an exclamation of intense anger and laid the weapon back on the table without even taking the precaution of covering it up. I think he muttered an oath, but there was no fear in it, not a particle.

My disappointment was so great, my humiliation so unbounded, that, forgetting myself in my dismay, I staggered back and let the tray with all its contents slip from my hands. The crash that followed stopped Mr. Grey in the act of rising. But it did something more. It awoke a cry from the adjoining room which I shall never forget. While we both started and turned to see from whom this grievous sound had sprung, a man came stumbling toward us with his hands before his eyes and this name wild on his lips:

"Grizel! Grizel!"

Mrs. Fairbrother's name, and the man—

CHAPTER XXII.

AS he Wellgood? Sears? Who?

total ignorance of my presence, due probably to his great excitement, Mr.
Grey turned on his companion the moment he had closed the door and, seizing him by the collar, cried:

"Fairbrother, you villain, why have you called on your wife like this? Are you murderer as well as thief?"

Fairbrother! This man? Then who was he who was being nursed back to life on the mountains beyond Santa Fe? Sears? Anything seemed possible in that moment.

Meanwhile, dropping his hand from the other's throat as suddenly as he had seized it, Mr. Grey caught up the stiletto from the table where he had flung it, crying, "Do you recognize this?"

Ah, then I saw guilt!

In a silence worse than any cry this so called husband of the murdered woman, the man on whom no suspicion had fallen, the man whom all had thought a thousand miles away at the time of the deed, stared at the weapon thrust under his eyes, while over his face passed all those expressions of fear, abhorrence and detected guilt which, fool that I was, I had expected to see reflected in response to the same test in Mr. Grey's equable countenance.

The surprise and wonder of it held me chained to the spot. I was in a state of stupefaction, so that I scarcely noted the broken fragments at my feet.
But the intruder noticed them. Wrenching his gaze from the stiletto which Mr. Grey continued to hold out, he pointed to the broken cup and saucer, muttering:

"That is what startled me into this betrayal—the noise of breaking china.
I cannot bear it since!"

He stopped, bit his lip and looked around him with an air of sudden bravado.

"Since you dropped the cups at your wife's feet in Mr. Ramsdell's alcove," finished Mr. Grey with admirable self-possession.

"I see that explanations from myself are not in order," was the grim retort, launched with the bitterest sarcasm. Then as the full weight of his position crushed in on him his face assumed an aspect startling to my unaccustomed eyes, and thrusting his hand into his pocket he drew forth a small box which he placed in Mr.
Grey's hands.

"The Great Mogul," he declared simply.

It was the first time I had heard this diamond so named.

Without a word that gentleman opened the box, took one look at the contents, assumed a satisfied air and carefully deposited the recovered gem in his own pocket. As his eyes returned to the man before him all the passion of the latter burst forth.

"It was not for that I killed her!"
cried he. "It was because she defied me and flaunted her disobedience in my very face. I would do it again, yet!"

Here his voice broke and it was in a different tone and with a total change of manner he added: "You stand appalled at my depravity. You have not lived my life." Then quickly and with a touch of sullenness: "You suspected me because of the stiletto. It was a mistake, using that stiletto. Otherwise the plan was good. I doubt if you know how I found my way into
the alcove, possibly under your very eyes; certainly under the eyes of many
who knew me."

It was so like one she
 re. Of course I took it off, I let her retain it a little hand. But the pencil was r pound at the Medical

 L. Hooper.

Arrived at this conclusion, however, I read the rest of the letter. The
 test was to go on, but under different conditions. It was no longer to be made at my own discretion and in the upstairs room; it was to be made at luncheon hour and in Mr. Grey's private dining room, where, if by any chance Mr. Grey found himself outraged by the placing of this notorious weapon beside his plate, the blame could be laid on the waiter, who, mistaking his directions, had placed it on Mr. Grey's table when it was meant for Inspector Dalzell's, who was lunching in the adjoining room. It was I, however, who was to do the placing.
 With what precautions and under what circumstances will presently appear.

Fortunately the hour set was very near; otherwise I do not know how I could have endured the continued strain of gazing on my patient's sweet face, looking up at me from her pillow, with a shadow over its beauty which had not been there before her father's return.

And that father! I could hear him pacing the library floor with a restlessness that struck me as being strangely akin to my own inward anguish of impatience and doubt. What was he dreading? What was it I had seen darkening his face and disturbing his manner when from time to time he pushed open the communicating door and cast an anxious glance our way, only to withdraw again without uttering a word? Did he realize that a crisis was approaching, that danger menaced him, and from me? No, not the latter, for his glance never strayed to me, but rested solely on his daughter.
 I was therefore not connected with the disturbance in his thoughts. As far as that was concerned, I could proceed fearlessly; I had not him to dread, only the event. That I did dread, as any one must who saw Miss Grey's face during these painful moments and heard that restless tramp in the room beyond.

At last the hour struck—the hour at which Mr. Grey always descended to lunch. He was punctuality itself, and under ordinary circumstances I could depend upon his leaving the room within five minutes of the stroke of 1. But would he be as prompt today? Was he in the mood for luncheon? Would he go downstairs at all? Yes, for the tramp, tramp stopped. I heard him approaching his daughter's door for a last look in and managed to escape just in time to procure what I wanted and reach the room below before he came.

My opportunity was short, but I had time to see two things—first, that the location of his seat had been changed so that his back was to the door leading into the adjoining room; secondly, that this door was ajar. The usual waiter was in the room and showed no surprise at my appearance, I having been careful to have it understood that hereafter Miss Grey's appetite was to be encouraged by having her soup served from her father's table by her father's own hands, and that I should be there to receive it.

"Mr. Grey is coming," said I, approaching the waiter and handing him the stiletto loosely wrapped in tissue paper. "Will you be kind enough to place this at his plate, just as it is? A man gave it to me for Mr. Grey; said we were to place it there."

The waiter, suspecting nothing, did as he was bidden, and I had hardly time to catch up the tray laden with

Mrs. Fairbrother's name, and the
 man—

CHAPTER XXII.

WAS he Wellgood? Sears? Who?
 A lover of the woman certainly.
 That was borne in on us
 by the passion of his cry:

"Grizel! Grizel!"
 But how here? And why such fury in Mr. Grey's face and such amazement in that of the inspector?

This question was not to be answered offhand. Mr. Grey, advancing, laid a finger on the man's shoulder. "Come," said he, "we will have our conversation in another room."

The man, who in dress and appearance looked oddly out of place in those gorgeous rooms, shook off the stupor into which he had fallen and started to follow the Englishman. A waiter crossed their track with the soup for our table. Mr. Grey motioned him aside.

"Take that back," said he. "I have some business to transact with this gentleman before I eat. I'll ring when I want you."

Then they entered where I was. As the door closed I caught sight of the inspector's face turned earnestly toward me. In his eyes I read my duty and girded up my heart, as it were, to meet—what? In that moment it was impossible to tell.

The next enlightened me. With a mistake, using that stiletto. Otherwise the plan was good. I doubt if you know how I found my way into

 the alcove, possibly under your very
 eyes; certainly under the eyes of many
 who knew me."

"I do not. It is enough that you entered it; that you confess your guilt." Here Mr. Grey stretched his hand toward the electric button.

"No, it is not enough." The tone was fierce, authoritative. "Do not ring the bell—not yet. I have a fancy to tell you how I managed that little affair."

Glancing about he caught up from a nearby table a small brass tray.
 Emptying it of its contents, he turned on us with drawn down features and an obsequious air so opposed to his natural manner that it was as if another man stood before us.

A Story of Monte Carlo

By EDITH V. ROSS

Peter Orloff was a young Russian who inherited an estate and 200,000 rubles, into the possession of which he entered when he was twenty-one years old. He concluded before settling down on the estate to take 5,000 rubles and visit Rome, Berlin, Paris and other continental cities. So as soon as he had arranged his affairs for his absence he started for Berlin, from whence he went to Rome, then Naples, where he sailed for Genoa, and a short time after his arrival at that port was in the attractive winter resort, Nice.

He had left behind him a fiancée, Sonia, the daughter of a neighbor, and long before the time set for his return he felt inclined to go home. But his betrothed was spending some time in St. Petersburg, and if he went home he would find her absent. He felt that it would be better to remain away for the appointed term, at the end of which the wedding was to take place. There-his expenses to St. Petersburg and keep him there till it would be time to return to his home and the wedding.

Then it occurred to him that it would be nice to win enough more to buy a present to take with him for Sonia. He would go by way of Paris and doubtless see many pretty things there from which he might select something to please his betrothed. He laid 10 francs on the table and won. Then he lost. After that he won quite a good deal, when he struck bad luck and lost nearly every bet he made. At 2 o'clock in the morning he had lost all the ready money he had with him.

The next morning instead of starting for home he drew 1,000 francs on his letter of credit and went to the gambling pavilion to recoup. He played all day and when evening came had won back his losses to within 20 francs. Then another streak of bad luck struck him, and by midnight he had lost the 1,000 francs he had drawn in the morning.

Within a few days Orloff had sunk what remained of the 5,000 rubles he had put aside for his journey and had drawn on his funds at home for 100,000 more. With this acquisition he won and lost considerable, for he played high. Week after week passed while he was seen constantly at the gaming table.

Meanwhile the time for his return and his wedding came round, and he did not appear to claim his bride. He wrote her that he would be unavoidably detained. Not having the heart to give the real reason, he said that he was ill and that his doctor had advised his remaining in the genial climate of the Riviera till spring had appeared in Russia. In order that his sweetheart might not know that he was at Monte Carlo and suspect the true cause of his lingering abroad, he sent his letters to Nice for mailing.

Sonia was naturally very much troubled. Had she any one to attend her she would have gone at once to Nice. It would not be considered proper for her to go alone to join her lover, so for awhile she waited, hoping that his health would improve and his doctor would consent to his return to Russia.

Then one day she heard that Peter had been making heavy drafts on his funds at home and had mortgaged his estate. She delayed no longer, but started at once for the Riviera. These drafts had caused her to suspect that her lover had been caught in the maelstrom of Monte Carlo, and she determined at starting that if she did not find him at Nice she would go at once to the gambling resort.

One night Orloff staggered into the pavilion with 50 francs ($10) in his pocket, the last of all he possessed in the world. He had drawn and lost all the money he had inherited and had mortgaged his estate for all it was worth. He was really ill from disappointment and despair, if from no other cause. After playing a couple of hours, in which he had won and lost, he found himself with two gold napoleons, these being the original $10 with which he had sat down in the beginning of the evening. He placed them on a square which, if it won, would bring him in five times his stake; then, placing his elbows on the table and shading his face with his hands, he waited the loss of his last coins.

He won. Without changing his posithose standing about the stable.

The girl gave a shriek and would have fallen on the floor had she not been caught in the arms of a lady beside her.

"A doctor! A doctor!"

A gentleman who had been watching the game advanced to Orloff, who still sat in his chair, held upright by one of the croupiers. A way was made for the gentleman, who took Orloff's wrist between his fingers, then put his hand on his heart.

"It beats faintly," he said.

Meanwhile the girl, who had fainted, revived and, seeing the unconscious figure before her stiff and stark, was about to pass again into a swoon when the lady who held her said to her:

"Courage, my child; he lives."

This enabled the girl to get a new hold upon her faculties and, throwing her arms about Orloff, she pleaded with him to live for her sake. Presently he opened his eyes and, seeing the girl in whose arms he was clasped, said faintly:

"Sonia!"

Orloff was carried from the pavilion, Sonia walking or staggering, supported by another, beside him. The two were then driven away. A heap of money lay upon the table, which neither of them seemed to remember. The proprietors of the gambling house gathered it, counted it and sent it to Orloff's hotel, where it was delivered to the landlord, who gave a receipt for it and locked it in his safe. Orloff was placed in charge of a nurse, though Sonia also attended him. Just before dawn she retired and sought sleep.

The next day Sonia went in to see the patient and found him stronger, but very gloomy.

"Return to Russia," he said. "Our wedding can never take place. I have lost all I possess."

"Oh, Peter, but you live!"

"Yes, I live. It would be better had I died."

There was a long silence between them. They knew that a marriage under the circumstances could not be. In Russia in the circle of landed gentry among whom they had lived the property settlements before marriage were indispensable.

There came a knock at the door, and the landlord entered.

"Is monsieur," he asked, "sufficiently recovered to attend to a little business?"

"Yes," was Orloff's reply. "You refer to your bill, I suppose. You must give me time."

"Not at all. Last night I received 107,781,250 francs on monsieur's account. I do not care to keep so large an amount in my safe over another night and would be obliged if monsieur would have it removed to a bank."

"What do you mean?" cried Orloff, staring at the man.

"What does monsieur mean? It is known to all at Monte Carlo that he won six times at 5 to 1, the amount of his winnings being as I have stated."

"Why do you mock me?" cried Orloff, starting up.

"It may be that monsieur became unconscious after placing his stake on the table and is not aware of the remarkable run of luck that followed. Had he won once more his winnings would have been between three and four million francs. The bank was wise not to permit another such bet."

"Great heavens! Is this true?"

INCREASING THE CONTENT

The subject of feeding fat or, in other words, the feed upon the percentage milk, is more or less confused. We are not surprised that our times become perplexed, as Dairyman.

There are those who claim possible to feed fat into milk that it is not possible under conditions to materially increase quality of milk by feed. T as we see it is this: A condition normal conditions reaction in keeping with her ration, supplying her with fat

About a year ago the Swiss Cattle Breeders' Society decided to get in line with our dairy breeds and for register, to be known as "Superior of Production," for superior merit. The result entirely satisfactory. When nomenal records have been trotted was spending some time in St. Petersburg, and if he went home he would find her absent. He felt that it would be better to remain away for the appointed term, at the end of which the wedding was to take place. Therefore, tiring of Nice, he concluded to run down to Monte Carlo.

On the evening of his arrival he dined, then sauntered over to the pavilion where gambling was going on. At that hour but few persons were playing, and there was little to interest him. He felt bored. He had a mind to go back to Russia. He would find Sonia at St. Petersburg and might enjoy himself there with her far better than spending his time alone in foreign lands. He came to a resolution to start on his return trip the next morning. This would give him but one evening to get away with.

He asked one of the croupiers at the gambling table at what hour the play would be in full swing and was told it would not be for another hour. To pass the interval he concluded to bet a few francs. He covered several of the numbers and won on two and lost on one. He repeated the bets and again won more than he lost. When he had gained on his third bet he began to be interested.

At 10 o'clock he had quite a pile of winnings before him. He looked up from it to the faces about him and saw that while he had been playing the throng had been gathering. So intent had he been on the game that he had not noticed their coming. He counted his winnings and found enough to pay beginning of the evening. He placed them on a square which, if it won, would bring him in five times his stake; then, placing his elbows on the table and shading his face with his hands, he waited the loss of his last coins.

He won. Without changing his position he left his winnings ($50) on the same place and won again ($250). A third time he won, and a fourth. He showed no excitement, sitting perfectly still, his hands covering his face, so that it was not plainly visible. When he had four times left his stake and his winnings on the same square and won every time the fact attracted the attention of every one at the table. At the fifth winning all present left off betting, every one watching the pile before him with intense interest. When he had won six times in succession the manager called upon him to take up his winnings, for the bank would not accept the risk another time.

At this juncture a lady appeared at the main entrance to the room and hurried to the table. She approached it on the opposite side to which Orloff was sitting and, hurrying around, laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Peter!"

No reply.

"Peter!"

The gambler sat mute, immovable. The game was stopped. Every eye was turned to him and the lady standing over him. Taking his head in her hands, she raised his face so that the light shone upon it. It was ghastly.

"He is dead!" came from several of conscious after placing his stake on the table and is not aware of the remarkable run of luck that followed. Had he won once more his winnings would have been between three and four million francs. The bank was wise not to permit another such bet."

"Great heavens! Is this true?"

"Monsieur may see the funds for himself."

"Surely I will see for myself," said Peter. Springing from his couch and following the landlord downstairs, he stood with him before the hotel safe. The landlord swung open the door, and there in the bottom of the safe was a pile of gold pieces that filled the young man with wonder and delight.

"Take it," said the landlord. "I do not care to be responsible for so much money. A bank is a better place for it."

A fortnight from that time Orloff had removed the incumbrance he had put upon his estate, and there was a wedding at the home of his fiancée, made doubly joyful by the escape he had had from ruin. The story of his loss and gain is one of the wonderful episodes of Monte Carlo related there.

About a year ago the Swiss Cattle Breeders' Association decided to get in line with the dairy breeds and for register, to be known as the "Register of Production," for a superior merit. The result entirely satisfactory. When the averages have been compared favorably with the averages of other leading dairy breeds, the Brown Swiss cow has a reputation of constitution, vigor, and disposition that will place her in the front rank as a dairy producer. Tom M. Brown Swiss bull shown by Walhalla Farms, M. N. Y. He was grand champion of his breed at the New York fair of 1911.

nutrients for keeping her in physical condition and producing a large amount of milk she is makes it impossible during the winter to increase the of fat in milk.

Experiment stations have shown combinations of feeding have never been able to produce a normal percentage of fat in milk. We are not unmindful of the fact that some feeders have thought that would increase the percentage of fat in a cow's milk. On the other hand, we believe they have made mistakes, and we must hold to the results of experiments conducted under normal conditions, the percentage of fat in milk.

Experiment stations have shown through a system of what might be called abnormal feeding, a cow prior to calving, the percentage of fat in milk. Professor Eckles of the Michigan Experiment station has been successful with different breeds. With one Jersey cow, in high condition at the time of calving, he took away nearly all the fat, and the effect was a higher testing milk than before. Another instance was with a cow in a high condition prior to calving, and for some time after calving she produced milk above her normal. This in the true sense can be considered feeding fat into the milk rather than putting an animal in a condition by which her milk temporarily has a higher percentage of butter.

Feeding fat into milk, as we have considered it, would be a mistake. For instance, a Holstein cow, for instance, tested 3 1/2 per cent and found that it would test more than 10 per cent. It would be a great boon to the dairy industry if such a system could be discovered whereby a cow with her wonderful milk could be made to produce a quality of milk produced by the Jersey. This is the farmer's cow far superior to the one we have now. But, a normal system of feeding has been able to produce a percentage increase in the percentage of fat in milk.

Remove to the serving dish and fill each apple with a mixture of chopped raisins, dates and figs. Pour a little of the sirup over them and garnish with whipped cream. If desired uncooked apples may be used, in which case the skin should be left on. Red apples are the most attractive.

COLONIAL RUGS.

The Hand Woven Sort Are Again in Favor.

The hand woven rug or the colonial squares have come back to favor in the general return to the colonial styles of interior decoration that have swept over our homes.

There are many forms of hand woven rugs, the braided form being the easiest. A single braid of three strands is made of strips of cotton materials of many colors, sewed in long strands and collected in large balls before the braiding is begun.

The plaited rug can be in a round form or a long oval rug. Some women are emphasizing one color, and therefore the long strips are dyed by any of the directions that come with reliable dyes on the market.

A hooked rug may be made of pieces of linen, silk, gingham, etc., and a piece of burlap or bagging.

The small pieces are pulled up through the weave of the burlap by

Trinity Church Notes.

At the young people's meeting on Monday evening Miss Wilson read a paper on the early life of David Livingstone. Mrs. Grange dealt with the character and life work of the great missionary. Both papers were full of interest and were very much enjoyed by all present. Next Monday evening Mr. W. S. Herrington will address the Young People's Association on "Early Napanee." The public are cordially invited. On Sunday evening the Pastor will speak on conscience—What it is, how far is it a safe guide, how are its decisions to be tested, can it be educated—a very important and practical subject.

Presentation at Morven.

On Thursday evening of last week between sixty and seventy of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. William Valteau gathered at their residence to bid them farewell and wish them success in their new home in Saskatchewan to which they will go in a few days in company with Mr. and Mrs. German Valteau. Mr. Chas. Garrison read an address regretting the departure from Morven of Mr. and Mrs. Valteau and expressing the appreciation of the neighbors and friends of the services of Mr. Valteau in church work and the esteem in which they were held by the community at large. Following the address Mr. J. Albert Bell on behalf of the assembled company presented Mr. and Mrs. Valteau with a beautiful bible and hymn book and a substantial purse. The visitors came provided with well filled baskets and a pleasant evening was spent.

The Annual Convention of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance is scheduled this year for Feb. 26th and 27th, and is to be held in Massey Music Hall, Toronto. Every church and society is entitled to send delegates, and arrangements have been made for reduced rates on the various railway lines. If the delegates be three hundred in number (as they have been for the last four or five years) the fare will be single, otherwise a fare and a third will be the rate. Not only delegates appointed by churches or societies are entitled to this reduction, but all going to attend the convention, the tickets good going from Feb. 21st to 27th, returning as late as March 3rd.
A special committee has been at work for some time preparing the programmes, which, it is hoped, will surpass that of any preceding year and that is saying much. Heretofore these conventions have proved most helpful and stimulating to the Temperance cause, affording as they do the opportunity for the discussion of methods for carrying on active work. In these conventions are to be found many men and women of both tact and experience, who are able and willing to point out to others the best and most practical way to handle the Temperance Question. Because of this quite apart from the official programme, there is an inspiration in the meetings which invariably bears fruit. All those interested in this work and free to attend the convention are being urged to do so, that its influence may be as wide spread as possible.
